

Northwestern Buffett Global Collaboration Grant description

Northwestern Buffett Global Collaboration Grant Application

Northwestern faculty can apply for this grant to further their work with international collaborators. These partners can be faculty members at other colleges or universities, leaders from global civil society or individuals from government, the private sector or community organizations.

The Buffett Institute's Global Collaboration Grants support a wide variety of globally focused faculty projects in research, service, teaching, international development or community engagement.

For example, faculty may use these grants to:

- explore new faculty research opportunities through global research sites visits, travel to and from collaborating entities and hiring research assistants

- organize lectures, workshops, conferences, and symposia
- provide global opportunities for classroom partnering and joint virtual teaching or
- develop community-centered projects in dialogue with community leaders, local governments and nonprofit organizations
- invite global collaborators to campus for short virtual or in-person residencies, such as lectures, workshops, conferences, and symposia (If you're applying to invite a collaborator to campus in person, you must also complete the Buffett Visiting Scholar application)

The maximum annual award is $10,000 per applicant. Faculty may only be awarded this grant once per academic year. Applications are due October 15 and April 15.
